In Loving Memory

Daniel Conner Mauser
June 25, 1983 - April 20, 1999

Dan, a sophomore, competed for the Columbine High School Forensics team in Cross-Examination Debate, Lincoln Douglas Debate, and student Congress. He was a member of the National Forensic League and had earned 176 points. With his love for detail, Dan was a born debater. Although he switched from CX to LD, that didn't stop him from becoming the big brother to our novice CXers. Dan taught us to look for what was best and most worthwhile in others, and we will always carry that lesson with us.

Rachel Joy Scott
August 5, 1981 - April 20, 1999

Rachel, a junior, competed for the Columbine High School Forensics Team in Interpretation of Poetry, Humor, and Drama. She was a member of the National Forensic League and had earned 138 points. On any other face, it would be an oxymoron, but Rachel had the most beautiful smirk. Her quick wit kept us on our toes, and in her open spirit, everyone found a friend. We will miss her laugh, her light, her love.

Columbine High School had thirteen precious lives taken from us on April 20, 1999. The Columbine Forensics family lost two treasured members that will always be remembered. Their love for competition, excellence, and life will go with us always.

COUNCIL ADOPTS LITTLEFIELD NJFL PROPOSAL

Allow a portion of the NJFL member's points to transfer to a student's initial application into the NFL.

Whereas: The National Junior Forensic League chapters expose students to the National Forensic League due to the inherent relationship between the two groups; and,

Whereas: Students who participate in the NJFL earn points for participation and presentations, just as do student members of the NFL; and,

Whereas: Allowing NJFL members to carry over a portion of their NJFL points into their initial 25 points needed for membership in the NFL would provide a tangible link between the NJFL and the NFL; and,

Whereas: Providing a link between the NFL and NJFL programs has the potential to increase the growth of both organizations, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the NFL National Council that a portion of an NJFL member's points be transferrable to the initial 25 points required for membership in the NFL.

(Passed, 7-2 at the Spring Council Meeting)

Logistics:

1. Allow an NJFL student seeking membership in the NFL to transfer 10 percent of up to 100 points (100 points is the highest benchmark for degree recognition currently in the NJFL) toward the initial 25 points needed for NFL membership. Points will be rounded up or down. For example, a student with 46 NJFL points transfers 5 points toward initial membership in the NFL. A student with 81 points transfers 8 points toward initial membership in the NFL. The maximum number of points allowed for transfer is 10. The student seeking NFL membership still needs to earn at least 15 points through activity or competition at the high school level.

2. The NJFL points being transferred would be recorded under "service projects." For example, the following information would be recorded.

Date	Audience Addressed	Type of Speaking	Points
1999	NJFL Membership Transfer	NJFL # _____	10 points

If the coach or student does not have the NJFL number of known current points, those areas may be left blank and filled in by the National NFL office.

3. A NJFL member transferring points toward initial NFL membership is still required to pay all membership fees required by the NFL. There is no credit for NJFL membership fees paid prior to NFL membership.

4. The NFL National Council has the right to change or modify any procedures to facilitate a smooth transition to the new system.

Reasons to Choose an NFC Summer Camp

- 1) Tried and True Programs. Last year hundreds of students from throughout the nation chose NFC summer camps over other options. Over the last two years NFC students have participated in late elimination rounds of such tournaments as: Wake Forest, the Glenbrooks, Greenhill, St. Mark's, Loyola, Redlands, Emory, the Tournament of Champions, NFL Nationals and virtually every other major national circuit tournament. We encourage you to seek out former NFC participants and discover for yourself why NFC camps are superior. You can get the same quality experience!
- 2) Staff/Student Ratio. Attend a program where you will get access to personalized debate and events instruction. Last year's NFC camps averaged staff to student ratios of 1:7. This is based on primary instructors only, and does not even include access to supplemental staff.
- 3) Experienced, National Caliber Instructors. Our staff is composed of instructors who have achieved the pinnacle of success in every important aspect of the forensic community, including collegiate and high school coaches who have led their students to final rounds at most major national tournaments and former competitors who have attained similar success, including NFL and TOC final round participants. Our staff is hand-picked for their ability to teach their successful techniques to students of every level of experience.
- 4) Unique Combination of Value & Quality. NFC camps provide an optimal combination of quality instruction, individualized attention, and value because we recognize that a great camp is useless if you've got no money left over for tournaments!

Mountain Brook Jr. HS, AL

Summary: This has been an exciting year for Mountain Brook Jr. High. Student membership and student interest is increasing and "we're thrilled to be part of the organization." A number of Mountain Brook students have been active as well in the Alabama JUNA (Junior United Nations Assembly) competition. The group represented Israel and was able to present a resolution and defend it as well as to cross-examine other groups presenting resolutions.

"We look forward to adding student congress to the classroom activities next year. We are also pleased that two social studies teachers have added variations of debate to their classes."

We participate in six events: Dramatic and Humorous Interpretation, Duo Interpretation, Original Oratory, Storytelling, and Extemporaneous Speaking. Our chapter has 18 members in grades six through eight. Because forensics is an extracurricular activity, we practice after school. This requires commitment on the part of members.

"At practice we work hard and enjoy ourselves." In addition to competition, team members perform their pieces for different classes in school, PTA meetings, and special events. Names of participants are announced at the school's wrestling matches. This year there were two team members, Kristen Barney and Amanda Mitchell who earned pins for accumulating 100 points.

Details/Comments: Sixth grade NJFL member Brittany Bergeron comments, "Being an NJFL member has helped others and myself with our language, interpersonal skills, and public speaking. All of us feel as if we are a family and a team. We understand that in order to be successful we need to rely on each other."

Douglas Byrd Middle School 6th grade team members receive a certificate of recognition at year-end celebration.

8th Grade team members receive their NJFL certificates framed as they "graduate" at year-end celebration.

Jonesborough Middle School, TN

Summary: Jonesborough Middle School holds a charter membership in the National Junior Forensic League. Forty students in grades 6-8 meet after school two Fridays per month to rehearse monologues and skits. The club is sponsored by Judy Markwood, a teacher at Jonesborough Middle School. A Christmas program and a spring program are given for the student body each year. Additionally, students have performed for area events such as Earth Day celebrations, The Jonesborough Christmas Parade, the Jonesborough Civic Trust's Tour of Historic Homes and local civic clubs. Field trips to area theaters develop an appreciation of live theater. These include Friday evenings at local community theaters and Saturday matinees at the famous Barter Theater in Abingdon, VA.

Details/Comments: A future goal for the school includes participation in an annual regional forensic competition for middle school students. Mrs. Markwood invites any sponsor in the area interested in competition to contact her at the school (423-753-1190).

Bunche Middle School, GA

Summary: The Ralph Bunche Middle School Debate Program has been a very successful middle school program. Its success can be measured in the growth of the team's participants, as well as, city and state titles.

Three years ago, the debate team debated with three teams and went on to place 2nd in the state tournaments and 2nd in the Atlanta City Tournaments. Last year, our team increased to five teams and placed first place in the Atlanta City Tournaments both for teams and speaker. We are recipients of the Sweepstakes Award for '98 and '99.

Accomplishments: This year's participation has been excellent. The team has grown to 16 teams, and has already recruited 12 additional teams for next year's participation. This year our school, Ralph Bunche Middle, was awarded the Outstanding Program award for Best Middle School Program.

Details/Comments: Between semesters, our debate team sponsored a 10-hour debate academy and invited competing schools to share in the art of debate. We attribute our success to dedicated coaches like Evelyn Mobley and Esther Walters. Also, our principal, Dr. Jacquelyn George has served as a wonderful support system.

Our Lady of Lourdes Catholic School, NC

Summary: The following presentations were made: presentation with Duke Middle School; presentation for Home & School meeting; presentation with Music Program for Parent's night; and a presentation for 6th & 7th graders.

Accomplishments: Start up of Forensics and Debate for Our Lady of Lourdes Catholic School with the main goal of having fun developing speaking skills. Duke Middle School's debate team was invited to perform for Our Lady of Lourdes Catholic School. The school is looking strongly at offering an elective time period during the school day when students can choose to participate in forensics, rather than after school or weekends.

Details/Comments: "We are hoping to find other schools in Raleigh to help build a program in this area. We are proud of our students and look forward to continuing our program next year. Every one of the students earned at least 10 points for the year and was acknowledged at an end of the ceremony where they received NJFL pins. With some experience under their belt, supportive teachers and most importantly, talented, willing students, how can we miss? Thank you to NJFL for your support in getting us started in forensics!"

St. Joseph Hill Academy, New York

Summary: Beginning this school year, St. Joseph Hill Academy implemented a story telling program for pre-kindergarten and kindergarten students. The program is quite simple and has been a remarkable success. Volunteers in the 7th and 8th grade go into the classes twice a week for a 20-minute period. During this time, the older students read stories to the younger children. When the story is complete, the readers ask questions to the listeners on the content and meaning of the stories. The young listeners look forward to the readers arrival. The program has effectively introduced reading and listening skills in a fun-filled manner. As for the participating 7th and 8th graders, they have had the opportunity to develop their interpretive reading skills and public speaking skills. Of course they will all use these new found tools in the future.

Accomplishments: Many students have participated in the program to overcome their fear of speaking in front of an audience. Others students served to participate in a school service project. As the program developed the readers wanted to be more involved because they found so much pride and joy in the response the young children gave them.

Details/Comments: "To know that a group of people can look at you and hope to be like you means more to me than anything," said Alyson Reed. "We never know how much fun we would have reading to little kids," recalled Georgina and Christina Ferzili. The program was a confidence builder for all the students who participated and gave them an opportunity to take pride in a job well done.

Students who participated in the Story Tellers Program: Stephen Volpe, Yousef Khalid, Lindsey Clarke, Georgina Ferzli, Christina Ferzli, Diana Gesualdi, Bobbie Pellegrino and Alyson Reed.

NORTHWEST ROSE NATIONALS

PORTLAND, OREGON

JUNE 11 - 16

Since we announced our return last month, we have been very happy to hear from many of our loyal supporters who made Victory Briefs the handbook of choice for Lincoln-Douglas debaters. We have been equally encouraged by the response from the next generation of debaters each wanting to know more about Victory Briefs. To address concerns raised by even the most vocal of skeptics, we thought it would be helpful to publicly answer some of the most frequently asked questions we have received.

Frequently Asked Questions and Answers

Q: Are you guys a bunch of ex-policy debaters trying to cash in on the Lincoln-Douglas market?

A: Unlike many other companies that attempt to capture the largest market possible, Victory Briefs specializes in L-D debate. All of its writers are former national qualifiers in L-D, and all of its researchers have graduate degrees in library sciences. How's that for expertise!

Q: I never find debate briefs helpful because they generally consist of a bunch of evidence cards strung together. Is Victory Briefs any different?

A: It doesn't take much effort for a debate company to string together hundreds of quotes and call the result a "handbook." But instead of merely cutting and pasting evidence cards, Victory Briefs prides itself on the original thought which goes into each issue. Every handbook includes three to five Topic Overviews written by different staff authors, each sharing his or her personal insights into the resolution. On top of that, each issue includes in-depth value perspectives and a detailed analysis of 10-15 issues, spanning both sides of the resolution – all in addition to evidence cards.

Q: Last year I made it to the elimination rounds at Nationals. Can Victory Briefs really help me?

A: Victory Briefs can be used by advanced debaters because it prompts you to think about the resolution in new ways. In fact, Victory Briefs has been quoted in the final round at Nationals. Is that advanced enough for you?

Q: I am a novice debater. My coach tells me not to use debate briefs because he's afraid that they'll slow the development of my debate skills. What should I tell him?

A: Victory Briefs will now include a new feature designed especially for novices – the Novice Overview. This section will teach new debaters how to debate, using the current resolution as a backdrop. Thus, the emphasis of this section will be on the skills of debate rather than on the subject matter of a single resolution.

Q: Can Victory Briefs really give me a competitive edge since everyone buying it will have the same topic overviews and evidence cards?

A: One benefit of Victory Briefs is its new Literature Review section. This section is designed to teach debaters how to further research the current topic. That way, debaters willing to put in the extra effort will have guidance on how to obtain additional material giving them the inside track.

Q: The problem with ordering debate handbooks is that they arrive in the mail too late to be useful. Do you have a solution for this?

A: Recognizing the importance of getting a "head start" on the competition, Victory Briefs now offers internet accessibility, in addition to regular mail purchases. Handbooks may be ordered online and downloaded instantly from our web-site, enabling students to obtain materials as early as possible. A handbook supplement will also be available online, updating prior research.

Q: Where can I get more information?

A: You can find information about our staff writers, purchases, and a host of other topics by logging on to: www.victorybriefs.com. Victory Briefs hopes that our web-site will serve as your one-stop internet location for L-D debate resources and information. Hope to see you all there!

GOODWILL NFL AMBASSADORS AT WORK

Check presented to the Rape and Abuse Crisis Center, Fargo (ND). Monies raised through a fund-raising speech tournament.

Although NFL 1998 All-American Lindsay Littlefield from Shanley High School in Fargo (ND.), does her fair share of winning debate, oratory, and extemporaneous speaking finals, she has more than winning on her mind. This spring, she and her coach (who doubles as her father) planned an invitational speech tournament to raise money for the Rape and Abuse Crisis Center in Fargo, (ND). Nearly 100 students from five NFL schools (Fargo North, Fargo South, West Fargo, Grand Forks Red River, and Shanley) and five NJFL middle school programs (Agassiz, Discovery, Ben Franklin, West Fargo, and Sullivan Middle School) participated.

Always concerned about the growing problem of domestic violence in our society, Lindsay and her partner Kathleen Curtis, another NFL point leader, were determined to make a difference. They began researching domestic violence in Russia and learned that there is no consistent U.S. foreign policy regarding domestic violence world-wide. This interest translated into action when the Rape and Abuse Crisis Center was selected as the recipient of the funds raised by the tournament.

The invitational was termed a "jeans" tournament. This means students could wear jeans, instead of dressing up, if they paid a $4.00 donation. The donation covered all entry fees for the student. To further the cause, the Lincoln Speech and Debate Society, a group of forensic competitors from North Dakota State University, were organized by former NFL member from Fargo South, Elizabeth Challey, to donate any rounds needing to be covered by hired judges. In all, 37 rounds of competition were provided at no cost to the tournament. Other judges and coaches added their own donations to the coffers.

A local trophy company, Insignia Products, donated $357 worth of medals which were used as awards. Shanley High School donated paper products, postage, duplication costs, and provided a DJ so the students could "party" until the results were ready.

When the evening was over, happy competitors claimed that they really enjoyed being able to compete, have some fun, and contribute to a worthwhile cause. Mary Tollefson, Volunteer Coordinator for the Rape and Abuse Crisis Center was present to receive a "check" for $715 from Lindsay and the other students and coaches who participated. Tollefson commented, "As a non-profit organization, we are always happy to receive a check. But, when we see students working together to plan and carry out an event like this, it is really wonderful. You deserve the thanks of those people in our community who suffer from the effects of domestic violence."

Lindsay and Kathleen have qualified for the 1999 National Tournament in policy debate, making Lindsay North Dakota's first four-time qualifier to Nationals. It's young people like these who stand out as representatives of what the best of the National Forensic League is all about.

THE D G E

MAKING REBUTTAL OVERVIEWS MORE EFFECTIVE by David M. Cheshier

In the past ten years, the tactic of starting each of the last two rebuttals with a short overview has become popular almost everywhere. Students now routinely instruct judges to set aside extra paper for their introduction, and many judges are enthusiastic about them: if done well, overviews add an element of real eloquence to the rebuttal, and more importantly, they provide debaters an opportunity for synthesis, a chance to offer a more fully elaborated "big picture."

Of course, these overviews aren't perfect. Sometimes they run on too long, diverting time from critical line-by-line coverage. At other times they feel a bit perfunctory, as if tacked on at the top, repetitive of more nuanced explanations that will come later. Sometimes even outstanding debaters get a bit derailed when they end up spending a full minute or more explicating the "five reasons we're winning."

A word about my own bias: Like many judges I like the summation section at the top of the rebuttal. But, and perhaps this puts me in the minority, I believe introductory overviews tend to be too long, frequently contributing too little to the overall tactical work a great rebuttal must accomplish. My purpose in writing is to invite you to consider how the introductory overview can be improved.

A note too about terminology: In what follows, I want to distinguish between short introductions that start off an entire rebuttal, and introductory assessments offered along the way in a speech, such as at the top of a major position. So when a student starts off his or her rebuttal with an assessment ("The case turn nullifies the advantage, meaning any risk of Clinton outweighs"), I refer to that kind of speech starter as a "rebuttal overview," or RO. I aim to contrast that sort of global introduction with internal overviews ("On Clinton, remember: all their uniqueness arguments actually feed the disadvantage. Now on the 2AC #1: No link..."), and refer to those as IO's. The basic gist of this essay is a recommendation that RO's be used sparingly, and that IO's be used more frequently.

What Goes Into a Good Overview

Rebuttal overviews, RO's, should only be used if they make strategic choices more powerfully clear for your judge, and if they free up time you would otherwise have to expend elsewhere. Unless they meet both criteria, in my opinion, you should think about eliminating the overview.

To see why this is so, consider that a major benefit, perhaps the overriding benefit, of the RO is how it provides debaters with an opportunity to escape the sometimes straightjacketing constraints of the flowsheet. If rebuttalists simply follow the previous sequence of arguments, or argue methodically line by line, a kind of deadening and equalizing effect sometimes results where everything blurs together and all claims appear equal in significance. The RO allows speakers to pull one or two major ideas out of this morass and call them to the attention of a judge who might not appreciate their real importance to his or her decision. Given this, the major question you should consider in formulating your overview should be: What arguments are most productively pulled to the top of the flow? And, relatedly, will moving this claim around on the flowsheet benefit our position (both with respect in time and strategy), or will it end up costing us in both areas?

In the couple seconds time you have to think about your rebuttal introduction, think about using these rules of thumb:

In thinking about the round, if you find yourself returning to the same central point over and over as you prep major positions, move that point into the overview. Does the counterplan have a transforming effect on every other argument? Do you find yourself making such a point on every disadvantage? Then move the thought to the top. Say it once, explain it fully, and move on to the line by line. Then, when you get to the same point later, your reference can be speedier and even a bit cryptic, since the idea has been explained in full from the start. Do all the disadvantages suffer the same uniqueness flaw? Instead of making the point elaborately on every disadvantage, put it at the top.

If time permits, think about what one argument your opponent has most screwed up, and consider discussion of it at the top. Or conversely, decide what one argument in the debate most favors your position, and move that to the top. If a major response has been mishandled from the beginning of the round, make it the RO ("From the start, they've never understood that our plan does not require Russia to do anything - it only makes an offer. This takes out their disadvantage links!"). Or if a major aspect of the case has been dropped all along, make that the RO ("At no point in this debate have they even tried to answer the nuclear accidents scenario. A totally conceded nuclear war!").

You might also consider using the RO to address glaring weaknesses in your own position. Has an argument been mishandled or dropped by your partner? Sometimes it can be quite effective to acknowledge the problem at the beginning of the rebuttal, get it out of the way, and then move on to other issues that favor you.

If there is an issue of great remaining complexity, consider a full explanation of your position in an RO. I often seen rounds where students introduce a smart counterplan, specific to the affirmative and designed to nullify some major part of the case. But because counterplan texts are read at top speed, the strategic brilliance of the maneuver can become confused in the judge's mind until too late in the debate, and judges sometimes find themselves wondering how, for example, the counterplan you've designed escapes your own disadvantages. In cases like this, where either the strategic complexity or argumentative sophistication of your claims might leave the less informed behind, consider allocating time in an RO to a quick summary explanation of your strategy.

Making the Overview More Powerful

Once you decide to use a rebuttal summarizing overview and what to include in it, how can it be made more effective and powerful?

First, keep it short. At the start of a rebuttal you have the judge's full attention. There is no need to orate at length about your argument. Say what must be said once, explain the point clearly, and move on. Guard against letting valuable rebuttal time slip away. And, related to this, keep the overview as simple as possible. Overviews which start with words like, "There are seven reasons why..." will almost always prove a disastrous misallocation of time later in the speech.

Use the overview to make impact assessments. Overviews are often most powerful when they make assessments across arguments which could not successfully be made on the impact subpoint of any particular position. The overview can even provide some limited opportunities for making new impact calculations. Stress what is exceptional about case or disadvantage impacts, or alternatively, lay out a brief framework for judge decisionmaking (e.g., use the summary to remind the judge of the critique's a priori status).

Think about scripting out the rebuttal overview in advance of the speech. The 2AR often has some time to think about the larger issues in the round while the second negative rebuttalist prepares. While the critical issues sometimes change given radical 2NR choices, usually they don't. Therefore, if you give the 2AR, consider scripting out word for word what you might want to say at the start of your speech. It will only take a couple seconds to modify the script right before you speak, if necessary. An advantage of such advance scripting is how it keeps you focused on moving quickly through the overview, and minimizes the need for extensive elaboration and repetition. Obviously such scripts are not to be read at hyperspeed, but should be delivered with eloquence and a sense of urgency and forcefulness.

Think about your summaries after the debate. Often judge critiques will use rebuttal overviews as the starting point for decision explanations. Listen carefully to how your critics interpreted what you said, where they seemed to diverge from your own assessments, and where they accepted your analysis. At home, consider how you could have more persuasively overviewed the rebuttal. How could putting the point differently have swayed the judge to your point of view? What might have been emphasized to clarify judge confusion about the strategy you defended? Spending time at home focused on big picture questions and their clear articulation will strengthen your big picture and scenario-construction skills in future debates.

Conclusion:

Why Overreliance on Rebuttal Overviews Can Be Dangerous

Back to the beginning: rebuttal overviews are popular for many reasons. Some love them because they like how introductions appeal to lay judges who might be less inclined to carefully follow the line by line execution of major positions. Others like the freedom summaries give debaters to escape the sheer technical work involved in arguing line by line. And of course others appreciate the occasion it provides for "big picture" debating, where everything is "put together" for the judge.

But sometimes forgotten are the dangers in allocating substantial time to the eloquent overview. Some judges feel the need to give RO's extra scrutiny, since new claims can easily be hidden there and left unchallenged directly by opposing debaters. Rebuttalists tend to overallocate time to the first issues they address (after all, as one speaks during the first minute, it seems the rebuttal will last forever), and so critical line by line coverage is too easily shortchanged at the bottom of the speech.

It is worth considering the possibility that the RO might not actually be the best vehicle for a student to communicate the "big picture." This is so because the big picture is necessarily and best conveyed throughout a speech, and not just at its start. In my experience, judges are most impressed with students who, at every moment in the rebuttal, convey a grasp of their arguments and the interrelationships between those positions. If this is true, moving all big picture assessments to the start of the speech can actually hinder strategic clarity and execution to the extent it trades off with argument-by-argument assessment.

Even lay judges may not be best served by short eloquence bursts at the top of the speech. I've noticed that many inexperienced judges don't even write down the overview. They'll sit there with their hands neatly folded together, and wait to start flowing until the line-by-line arguing begins.

These combined risks, that time will be misallocated, that overviews will divert from better "big picture" conveyance elsewhere, and that judges may not flow the overview or understand its role, lead me to recommend a modified approach which still has a place for limited rebuttal overviews, but which minimizes their use.

Many of the best debaters prefer to put short introductory sections of analysis at the top of each main issue, as opposed to grouping it all together at the start of the speech. Thus there will be short introductions at the top of each advantage, disadvantage, topicality position or critique still being extended. This is the better way to go. First, since these internal overviews (IO's) are directly pertinent to the issue at hand, the judge is likely to write your points down; after all, he or she is looking at the Clinton flow as you offer an assessment about the Clinton debate, so it only makes sense to flow. Second, IO's provide debates with more frequent occasions to articulate connections and convey the big picture, and thereby send a constantly reinforced message that the rebuttalist understands the intricacies of argumentative interaction. Third, IO's are less likely to derail overall time allocation, since they are not all assembled into the very start of the speech.

The habit of generating internal overviews on, say, each disadvantage improves your strategic skill as well, in part because the practice requires more mental work than just coming up with a pithy rebuttal opener. The practice forces one to give specific thought to each position, and to think about the strengths and weaknesses of that argument and an opponent's responses to it. The hyper-generality of most RO's too often lets debaters off the hook, and permits ultimately unpersuasive and banal summary claims, of the "Call for our cards!" or "We're winning topicality, killing them on nationalism, and the counterplan solves the case!" variety.

Of course, IO's do not foreclose the option of rebuttal introductions. But as you learn to introduce each major position, and declare your view of its strategic centrality to the debate, you'll find how little exposition needs to be productively moved to the very start of the speech. The result will be shorter and more powerful rebuttal overviews, supplemented by compelling issue-specific analysis; in short, the best of both worlds.

All of this is less relevant when debating before a judge who has explicitly stated a preference for extended rebuttal overviews. Obviously, for such critics you will best succeed by adapting to their bias. But my guess is that for the vast majority of other judges, you'll do better by offering very brief and powerful rebuttal introductions, elaborated along the way with issue-by-issue assessments.

What We Were

Victory Briefs was the publisher of Lincoln-Douglas debate materials, heralded and used by both coaches and students, novices and National champions. In addition to topic-specific analysis, Victory Briefs published the now classic How to LD book and the Value Handbook, volumes 1 and 2.

The Victory Briefs' approach has always been highly conducive to value-oriented Lincoln-Douglas debate. The briefs are never simply lists of evidence – they are carefully constructed, in-depth value perspectives with support from both recent and classical sources.

Our greatest validation has come from the hundreds of coaches nationwide who have wholeheartedly embraced our materials. Word of mouth has always been our greatest ally. We encourage you to ask around.

"I believe that you are responsible for improving the quality of LD debate that I heard at Nationals. Enjoyed the different viewpoints." – Mr. M.N.,
Shikellamy High School, PA

"Unlike [rival debate company], I have been able to verify the validity of the majority of your sources. You head the cards well and explain the positions thoroughly." – Ms. D.S., FJ Reitz High School, IN

"Much better than the others! You explore the issues and document your explorations. Others simply pile up evidence without thought or analysis. Please keep up this format!" – Ms. T.B., La Reina High School, CA

"Excellent – I'm truly impressed with the quality of LD analysis and research." – Mr. R.I., Mankato West High School, MN

"Victory Briefs blows [rival debate company] out of the water." – Mr. J.H., Butte High School, MT

"How do you compare with the rest? There is no second." – Mr. D.C., Lewis & Clark High School, WA

"Victory Briefs is by far the best. I only wish that I had heard of it earlier during my senior year." – Mr. D.L.,
Parsippany Hills High School, NJ

"You've done a great job! Thanks." – Mr. T.W.,
Great Falls High School, MT

What We Are Now

The Product. For each NFL topic, we publish a 80-100 page handbook, featuring, as always, three to five analytical overviews by former champions in Lincoln-Douglas debate. We analyze in detail 10-15 issues, spanning both sides of the resolution and including supporting evidence from some of the top university libraries. (If you are looking for pre-written cases, we are not the handbook company for you.)

New Feature: The Novice Overview. By popular demand, each topic handbook will include a section devoted to teaching novices how to analyze a resolution and how to think about constructing cases, using the current topic as an example.

New Feature: The Literature Review. Given our purpose to empower debaters, each handbook will also feature a review of the available research sources, including both print and on-line materials. This is designed to help debaters and coaches orient themselves to a new topic, and to enable them to effectively conduct additional research on their own.

Instantaneous Online Delivery. We are committed to publishing each handbook promptly after a topic is announced. For those who want even quicker access to their materials, we offer instant downloads on the internet. Our professionally designed web-site will also allow online ordering, and will serve as your one-stop internet location for LD debate resources and information. Before voting this summer, look for our take on the strengths and weaknesses of the proposed 1999-2000 topics.

FREE NATIONALS ANALYSIS

SUPERIOR PROGRAM: The Stanford National Forensic Institute offers a unique national caliber program which features policy debate, LD debate, and NFL events. The policy program is 3 weeks, the IE and LD programs are 2 weeks. The SNFI is conducted by the Stanford Debate Society of Stanford University, a registered student organization of the Associated Students of Stanford University. An excellent faculty teaches students both fundamentals and advanced techniques in a rigorous, carefully structured environment that caters to the needs of forensics students at all levels. Policy debate students who have attended an institute of sufficient rigor earlier in the summer may apply for acceptance into the "policy debate swing lab," designed for students desiring 5 weeks of comprehensive instruction.

SUPERIOR SETTING: The SNFI is held on the Stanford University campus, located in Palo Alto, CA. There is no better location anywhere to study forensics. Being set apart from the city of Palo Alto Stanford provides a beautiful setting for the students to study, practice and learn. Supervision is provided by an experienced staff which collectively has hundreds of previous institute teaching sessions of experience. The SNFI specializes in advanced competitors, but comprehensive programs at all levels are available.

Announcing the 1999

Florida Forensic Institute and National Coaching Institute

FFI: JULY 30 THROUGH AUGUST 13 NCI: JULY 26 THROUGH JULY 30

A Few Highlights

Lincoln-Douglas Debate

The L-D workshop at the FFI continues to grow each year in numbers, just as the students leaving the institute have grown in their knowledge of debate. Our highly qualified staff of teachers and lab assistants work with students of all skill levels to enable them to reach their full potential as debaters. Students learn the foundations of philosophy, effective speaking skills and countless debate strategies that continuously place FFI alumni in the final rounds of national tournaments.

Duo Interpretation

The FFI offers instruction in all of the interpretation events, and we have one of the premiere programs for those interested in Duo Interp--NFL and/or CFL style. FFI instructors collectively have coached more than a Dozen National Finalists in this event, including several NATIONAL CHAMPIONS!

Student Congress

The FFI is one of the few institutes to offer Student Congress as a separate lab. Instructors work with students who are new to the event, as well as highly seasoned competitors who wish to refine their skills. The lab focuses on the essentials of Student Congress theory and practice - no one will ever call Congress a "secondary event" again.

National Coaching Institute (7/26-30) & FFI Teacher Workshop (7/30-8/13)

These workshops for teachers offer the opportunity for new coaches as well as experienced coaches to enhance their coaching skills. The FFI presents three options; an intensive one-week institute for coaches only, a two-week session which runs in conjunction with the FFI, or a combination of the two - one week of each. University credit is available.

Featuring top notch staff from the Florida Forensic Institute.

THE FFI ALSO OFFERS THE FINEST INSTRUCTORS IN THE COUNTRY FOR:

- Extemporaneous Speaking (Featuring Fr. John Sawicki & Mr. Merle Ulery)
- Original Oratory (Featuring Mr. Bob Marks)
- Team Debate (Novice & JV Labs, with Jim Wakefield, Jim LaCoste, & Jeff Tompkins)
- All Interpretation Events (With Tony Figliola, Peter Pober, Heather Wellinghurst, Debbie Simon, David Risley and more).

JOIN THE MOST EXCITING, INTENSIVE, AND REWARDING INSTITUTES IN THE COUNTRY!

Held on the campus of Nova Southeastern University in Ft. Lauderdale, FL

the moral defense of capitalism: FREE for coaches

Capitalism: The Unknown Ideal,

by Ayn Rand

The Ayn Rand Institute is pleased to announce the distribution of another free book by Ayn Rand. Capitalism: The Unknown Ideal should be especially useful for L-D debaters at this summer's national tournament.

CUI has chapters on the following topics related to capitalism:

- The moral justification of capitalism
- Capitalism and peace
- The persecution of businessmen
- The fallacies of antitrust law
- Common fallacies about capitalism (regarding monopolies, economic depression, labor unions, public education, inherited wealth, etc.)
- The gold standard and free banking
- The history of American free enterprise
- The effects of the industrial revolution on women and children
- Adulterated food and drugs
- The property status of the airwaves
- Intellectual property rights
- and much, much more....

To receive your FREE copy, just fill out the form and mail to the address below. You can also fill out an online form at <http://www.aynrand.org/debate> or email an order to debate@aynrand.org. PLEASE NOTE: As our books are limited, special preference will be given first to the coaches of students who have qualified for nationals in L-D, and second to those who have qualified in policy. Please specify which category you belong to on the bottom of the form.

OR E-MAIL US AT: debate@pilot.msu.edu

WHY SDI? After all, there are many summer institutes from which to choose. The SDI offers the following distinct advantages:

A COMMITMENT TO PRACTICE ROUNDS - By providing entering students with an affirmative case and several negative positions, SDI can begin practice rounds almost instantly, with some students debating as early as the second day of the camp. Although SDI produces large amounts of high quality evidence, we believe the only way to improve your debating skills is by providing many opportunities to debate in front of knowledgeable critics. In addition, both '99 sessions will conclude with judged tournaments, relaxed, yet structured, opportunities for students to validate the education received during their stay.

CURRICULUM DIVERSITY - Staff members and lab placements exist for all skill levels, ranging from novice groups to those choosing to polish varsity skills. In addition, the SDI administration is committed to a curriculum emphasizing the diversity of ideologies in the debate community, enabling graduates to succeed before a variety of judging audiences.

COACHES' WORKSHOP - SDI offers a unique opportunity for coaches to gain familiarity with both the topic and theoretical issues of their choice. College credit may be available, as are flexible attendance options. Contact Prof. Roper for further information.

SDI SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM - SDI can provide limited need-based financial assistance.

COMPETITIVE PRICES/ FLEXIBLE OPTIONS - SDI is committed to offering outstanding debate institutes at affordable prices, which include tuition, room and board, and copying of lab evidence.

Dear Coach,

We have all been touched by the plight of the Columbine Community. A number of our coaches have asked what would be an appropriate response. Peggy Benedict and I have come up with one way to show our support for the Speech Program at Columbine. We wonder if it might not be a good thing to see if we can help raise money to help cover the trip to Nationals for Marti and her three kids. It is clear that in the short time left until nationals that Columbine may not be in a position to gather funding. If you think this is an appropriate measure, could you ask your district coaches if they might be willing to take part? They can send money to:

THANK YOU

Most of us who have been around debate and forensic coaches know them to be generous people. Who else would give us so much time for others? I want everyone to know that the Show Me coaches are generous in other ways as well.

On February 19 at 1:30 AM my family and I had the wonderful experience of walking out of our burning home. I say wonderful, because a neighbor woke us up and we were able to leave the house before we were overcome by smoke or flames. When the Show Me coaches heard of my losses, they collected their prayers, their spirits and their purses to help me rebuild my life and my library. Their kind words and kind deeds have demonstrated that while I lost things, I gained tangible proof of friendship. I wish to extend a very heartfelt thank you to all of my friends!

Sincerely,

Gloria Henry
Director of Debate

Debaters learn to do original, topic-specific research, logical analysis and original case development. College debate is a separate and distinct activity from high school debate. High school students learn most from regionally and nationally successful high school coaches working in their areas of expertise. The Midwest student-faculty ratios never exceeds 10:1. Midwest instructors are not only lecturers but also interact with students as lab group leaders. Ethics and the art of communication are the foundation of competitive debate at Midwest. Midwest students have consistently been successful at regional and NFL national competitions.

Outspoken. Challenging.

Opinionated.

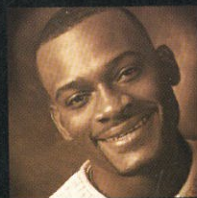

Will the flattery never end?

Just ask anybody. Members of the National Forensic League are strong. Strong enough to stand their ground, with something to say. Some call them opinionated. That's true enough. Who isn't? The difference is they have the guts to get up there and tell it like it is. Do you? For more information about the NFL, talk with members or call 920.748.6206 for an earful.
