From the Editor

J. Scott Wunn

Dear NFL:

As I sit down to write this month's letter, I find myself thinking about the hundreds of NFL schools and thousands of NFL members that have been affected by the horrific natural disaster that has hit our country. Hurricane Katrina has left thousands of people without food, shelter, and the necessary supplies for survival. In addition, hundreds of schools have been left without books, supplies and the resources necessary to provide youth with the fundamental education that they deserve.

The NFL's motto is "Training Youth for Leadership". A true leader understands when the needs of the many must outweigh the conveniences of a few. Therefore, I urge all NFL schools, administrators, coaches, and students to "step forward" as leaders in our organization and find a way to contribute to the NFL Hurricane Katrina Relief Program.

The National Office is encouraging all NFL schools to consider contributing financial donations, supplies, speech/debate texthooks, scripts, and other valuable resources to the relief effort. The NFL will collect and organize all contributions (both monetary and material) and distribute all donated resources to those NFL schools that have been affected by the disaster. The NFL will insure that all contributions go directly to support NFL Chapters and Affiliates that are in need.

Those schools that wish to contribute to the relief program should send contributions to the following address:

National Forensic League NFL Hurricane Katrina Relief Program 125 Watson Street Ripon, WI 54971

Thank you again for thinking of the thousands of NFL members that have been affected by this disaster.

PROBLEM AREA I: POSTSECONDARY EDUCATION

Resolved: The United States federal government should establish an education policy substantially increasing access to postsecondary education in the United States.

Postsecondary education has an impact on many members of the debate eommunity. The process of considering an institution, applying for admission, and affording tuition are concerns for students, parents, educators, and politicians. While efforts have been made to address postsecondary education's problems, many believe that access to postsecondary education in the United States is at risk. Affirmatives will be able to explore many different facets of postsecondary education including Pell Grants, student loans, international students, educational preparation, tuition discounting, admissions and financial aid processes. Affirmatives will also be able to explore access to alternatives to traditional college education such as trade and professional schools. Negative positions can include education selfregulation, state control, state programs, federalism, institutional accountability, corporate/institutional partnerships, and the impact of education on U.S. hegemony and budget. Through the research and debate of this topic, students will discover how education plays a role in the national and international economy while gaining practical information about the postsecondary education system that they may enter in the

PROBLEM AREA II: AGING IN AMERICA

Resolved: The United States federal government should substantially strengthen its assistance programs to United States residents age 65 and over for health care and/or retirement income.

The American population is quickly reaching a demographic crisis with its largest percentage and raw numbers reaching the age of 65 within the next decade. The problem will continue to grow as Americans retire at record rates. This trend impacts Social Security; medical care, including Medicare and Medicaid; and long-term care such as nursing homes, assisted-living facilities, and caregiving. Potential case areas include Social Security reform, mandatory retirement, Medicare, Medicaid, treatment of chronte diseases, medical care, caregiving, long-term eare, minority retirees, women retirees, and governmental control. Negative ground includes federalism, spending, economy, stock market, poverty, health eare, minority rights, women's rights, political capital, Bush foeus, and rights of the youth. Language, discourse, feminism, ageism, socialism, capitalism, and sexism are possible negative critical arguments pertinent to the area of aging in America. Applicable counterplans might be states, privatization, exclusionary, and faith-hased initiatives.

PROBLEM AREA III: ASSISTANCE TO AFRICA

Resolved: The United States federal government should substantially increase its assistance to Sub-Saharan Africa in one or more of the following areas: education, public health, nutrition.

There is perhaps no issue more timely and critical than the status of people living in poverty in Sub-Saharan Africa. While world attention has once again focused on this crisis, attention has not translated to sufficient action. Despite the promise of the G-8 to end African poverty, the World Development Movement calls the current solutions "a disaster for the world's poor." Africa is an essential topic, with current research and a wide array of potential solutions for both Affirmatives and Negatives to consider. Potential Affirmatives on this topic include AIDS reduction, loan programs, education of women and direct aid. Negative ground will be preserved with a strong array of generic and specific arguments, including kritiks of development, human rights promotion and colonialism, agent counterplans, and economic, military, and international cooperation disadvantages. While the resolution does eover a wide area, it will both challenge Affirmatives to develop creative solutions and provide Negatives with legitimate debatable ground. Given the critical dimension of this problem for this and generations to come, there is no better topic for the brightest of our students to tackle. Debating this topic would provide our students a unique opportunity to advocate solutions for people too often ignored in our policy discussions and debates, and give Africa the significance it deserves.

PROBLEM AREA IV: NATIONAL SERVICE

Resolved: The United States federal government should establish a comprehensive program of mandatory national service by United States citizens.

The mention of the word "service" automatically brings to mind John F. Kennedy's challenge to "Ask not what your country can do for you . . ." The concept of national service is one of the few issues on which our last two presidents agreed. The United States has a number of voluntary national service programs, such as AmeriCorps, Senior Corps and VISTA to name a few. Mandatory national service, it is argued, creates a bridge between socio-economic groups that have little normal contact, fosters civic and political participation and balances burdens among the more and less powerful or wealthy. Underlying the debate is the question of whether service is necessary or even something government should be doing. Affirmatives could specify the type of national service to be performed (major areas being conscription, education, health, public safety, environment); who would participate (18-24 year olds, students, retirees, welfare recipients); compensation (tax eredits, educational benefits, stipends, housing); as well as specifying whether service is to be full- or part-time. The primary focus of the topie is the clash between libertarians and communitarians. Negatives may argue that national service should not replace the responsibilities of government, that it undermines existing charitable or private enterprises and the benefits of "volunteerism" do not accrue either to the nation or the individual when it is not voluntary. Disadvantages include cost, diversion from further education and unemployment effects on displaced workers. The debate over national service concerns what we owe to our country and to each other.

PROBLEM AREA V: LATIN AMERICA

Resolved: The United States federal government should substantially decrease its barriers to trade with Latin America.

Welcome to Latin America. This topic proposal promises to be fun, exciting, educational and incredibly relevant to today's students. Latin America has experienced waves of economic crisis, largely caused by flawed United States policies. More specifically, the issue of trade with Latin America is uniquely important. Latin America is projected to be one of our largest markets in the eoming years, and with the passage of CAFTA, the framework is set for a lot of interesting prescriptions. More than ample ground exists for both sides, supported by abundant literature. Affirmatives will have the flexibility of determining what constitutes a barrier to Latin America trade, but it may still be necessary to defend trade promotion. Affirmatives may decide to approach the resolution in a number of ways; by promoting free trade agreements, by reducing tariffs, eliminating subsides, lifting sanctions, or even addressing some language or specific product concerns. The uegative would have case arguments dealing with the desirability of trade, United States relations with Latin America, the United States as an actor, politics disadvantages, and the economic effects of the plan. Ultimately, the literature on trade with Latin America is highly accessible and equitable, making for high quality debates. Lct's be a good neighbor!

LDEP VISION STATEMENT

The members of the LDEP believe that Lincoln-Douglas debate is primarily an educational activity to prepare students for academic and personal success in their future lives. Therefore, the competitive incentives of LD should reward students who:

- · Research thoroughly and ethically
- Reason logically
- Write and speak clearly and eloquently
- Develop direct resolutional analysis
- Explain arguments thoroughly rather than superficially
- Conduct themselves professionally, courteously, and respectfully.

We recognize that students porticipate in debate from a legitimate variety of motives, including the joy of spirited competition. As teachers, it is our responsibility to ensure that successful debate is educationally constructive debate. The LDEP works with coaches, judges, tournament directors, and other members of the debate community to pursue this goal through organizational and educational initiatives.

Join the LDEP for free!

If you care about the future of LD debate and you would like to add your voice to a host of other coaches who share your concerns, then simply go to our website and fill out the simple application form. The LDEP will approach the task of improving the educational value of LD using two general methods:

2) Lobbying for specific actions by coaches, tournament directors, summer programs and the NFL.

Go to our website to find free LD resources, such as judge training handouts, coaching ideals, and tournament administration materials. As our group develops we will continue to add resources that aim to maximize the educational value of LD.

Bincoln Douglas Debate

The Commodification of LD

By Jason Baldwin

Recommendations

In the past three to five years, Lincoln-Douglas-related business has grown spectacularly. Part I of this essay sketches how this happened. Part II offers several reasons to think the commercialization of LD is not an unmixed blessing. And Part III suggests ways that concerned readers can limit the influence of money on high school debate.

By way of disclosure, I have been employed by the University of Kentucky's LD workshop every summer since 1996, and by several other workshops in the years before then. To the extent that I have made money selling a service—and an expensive one—to bigh school students, some people may conclude that I am part of the problems I discuss below. That judgment, if correct, might be a reason for me to stop teaching at summer workshops, but it would not dissuade me from anything I say here about the dangers of commodifying LD.

I. History

Turning low- or no-cost activities into more expensive activities is part of the American way, and people have been trying to do it to high school LD since its inception in the early 1980's. Evidence, cases, textbooks, and summer workshops have been advertised in the Rostrum since well before I started reading the magazine in about 1990. Until fairly recently, most of these products had little impact on the overall shape of LD. Some students bought their evidence through the mail, for example, but these people did not often reach elimination rounds. The only LD "product" to exert anything like a national influence was the University of Iowa's summer workshop, which earned a reputation for excellent administration, trustworthy teachers, and an academically sound curriculum. Many nationally successful students attended this workshop, and from what I can see, its influence on LD has been overwhelmingly for the good.

A few years ago, business began to make its presence felt in LD as never before. Someone noticed two things: First, the supply of reasonably successful students who wanted to teach at summer worksbops vastly exceeded the demand for teachers at existing workshops. Second, the internet offered unprecedented opportunities to advertise cheaply, directly, and, shall we say, flexibly. These two facts suggested a business model: Hire lots of reasonably successful ex-debaters to form a workshop. Since they're students, they work cheap. Since they're students, they have strong rapport with the customer base (their friends). Since they're students, they can track (and, for that matter, change) the winds of LD fashion. Since they're students, they judge (or will soon be judging) many important debate rounds. And since they're students, they can get by with saying almost anything when they talk to their friends (the customers).

Viewed strictly as a business proposition, the model was a stroke of genius. And it has succeeded on a massive scale. But the summer workshop was only the anchor for a range of suddenly popular products including evidence, argument briefs, and, most recently, weekend workshops on current NFL topics (some complete with pre-fab evidence and case outlines). I am not aware of any of the sort of outfits I have described selling actual cases yet, but I know of at least two who sell DVDs of demonstration debates using staff-produced cases for each new NFL resolution. There is now at least one tournament operated by an LD business, and more are sure to appear if this proves lucrative enough (by itself or as a means of advertising the rest of the product line).

The website is the public face for multi-faceted LD business concerns, and like other kinds of commercial websites, LD business websites work hard to be more than just (blatant) advertising. They host discussion boards, publish "news" stories and interviews with debate "celebrities," and post tournament results and (of course) pictures.

Websites are not the only marketing front. Rostrum ads are still common, as are tournament appearances by staff (sometimes in company t-shirts or even [in at least one case] animal costumes). And businesses trying to break into the marketplace of ideas still need at least one young Turk to patrol online student discussion boards (such as the popular forum.lddebate.org) planting pro-company messages and attacking the competition.

No doubt new companies and products and marketing techniques will emerge. Many LD students have now become regular LD consumers, but there is a lot of money yet to be made.

II. Problems

I see four sorts of problems with the commercialization of LD. Let me be clear that I am not condemning the profit motive as such, nor am I suggesting that everyone who is now making money off of high school LD is implicated in each of the following problems. I am simply pointing to problems with the growing commercial culture in LD.

The most serious and general problem with business in debate is not unique to debate; it is possible in any educational domain and, really, in almost any human practice. The problem is that the end pursued by a business (profit) may threaten the ends properly pursued by the practice in which the business operates. Education aims to instill some combination of skills, knowledge, and virtues in students. There is always a risk that for-profit education schemes will compromise the proper goals and standards of a discipline in order to be more popular with consumers and hence more profitable. Although profit and excellence can pull against each other in any domain, the danger is especially acute in education because the potential consumers are, by the nature of the situation, not equipped to distinguish wheat from chaff. A defining feature of studenthood is not knowing what one needs to know. Most students know what they want, but few students know what they need. Wants can compete with needs, but businesses appeal only to wants.

High school debate is supposed to be a form of education instilling some bits of knowledge (basic moral philosophy, current events) but mostly certain skills (research, logic, rhetoric) and virtues (humility, open-mindedness, graciousness) in its participants. Some people have said that debate is merely a game pursued for the amusement of its players; here I will only remark that few of the people who actually pay for debate teams and tournaments would continue to pay for them if they believed that.

Two years ago (in the January 2003) Rostrum) I argued that the poor quality of much current LD is due to a failure on the part of those who control the game (coaches and judges) to key student incentives (ballots, speaker points, and ultimately trophies) to the larger educational ends of debate. Instead, LD has been allowed to take on a life of its own with internally evolving standards of success that are at best unrelated to, and at worst opposed to, more generally accepted standards of intellectual and rhetorical excellence. In this climate, the profit motive can be especially destructive by giving students what they want (tips for trophies now) rather than what they need (skills for life later).

And, in general, this is just what has happened. Most of the obvious examples have to do with the content of the products or services being sold to LDers; these examples relate in one way or another to the skills and knowledge that LD students should acquire. There can be no serious question that commercialization has fed the cancerous growth of jargon, speed, debate theory, and so-called postmodern so-called philosophy in LD.

But I want to focus here on commercialization's less noticed threat to the virtues that debate training should inculcate. Any well functioning person who spends much time around debaters knows that the most successful debaters are not always the best people. Successful debaters can be arrogant, combative, and cruel. This is one reason that good (i.e., successful) debaters do not always make good teachers or coaches. Debate teachers are supposed to model virtues (humility, patience, and kindness, for example) that some talented debaters never seem to acquire.

It used to be that the largest summer LD workshops (which were non-profit programs of colleges and universities) selectively hired ex-debaters as staff members partly on the basis of personal character. I don't mean that this practice was universal or perfectly realized or even articulate; nor do I mean that character was the main hiring criterion. But I believe that character did function at least as a constraint in the minds of the administrators hiring staff for such programs. I can recall several prominent debaters in the past decade who would almost surely have been hired by national workshops had they not been known to have insulted other students or disrespected their coaches. In the hiring decisions I helped to make, my colleagues and I frequently asked questions like: Does this person have the maturity and self-control to enforce rules and maintain appropriate boundaries with students? Would we be proud to present this person to parents as a teacher of their children? Is this the kind of human being we would want our students to become? Asking such questions is no special virtue; it should be standard procedure for anyone responsible to hire teachers, especially teachers who work as closely with, and exert as much influence on, their students as debate teachers do.

From what I can tell, character considerations do not meaningfully inform the hiring decisions of current for-profit workshops. These workshops want to attract as many students as possible. Ex-debaters are both cheap labor and an excellent source of publicity. Workshop students want to learn to do whatever last year's winning debaters did; they don't stop to quibble over maturity or virtue. So private workshops are now hiring as many successful ex-debaters as possible, including some who would have been deliberately not hired in earlier years. That's not to say that any workshop hires only vicious people or unworthy role models. I know several admirable, trustworthy people who teach at for-profit workshops, and there are doubtless other such people whom I do not know. But I also know of people with records of very public poor behavior who have been hired and actively promoted by for-profit workshops. These workshops are not hiring on the basis of poor character, but nor are they hiring on the basis of good character. They are not hiring on the basis of character at all. They are indifferent to character, because character does not improve their bottom line.

And, I am sorry to say, it seems to me that many non-profit workshops have, in turn, lowered their own hiring standards in order to remain competitive (and solvent). More than one LD workshop administrator has told me in so many words that their institutions are loosening their old standards in order to stay afloat.

The first problem with the growth of debate-related commerce, then, is that the profit motive may compromise educational standards. The discounting of character in workshop hiring decisions is one serious example of such compromise.

A second problem with the pursuit of profit in debate is that it encourages students to substitute purchased products for educationally valuable work. This problem is as old as mail-order evidence and cases, but it has grown recently as the use of such materials has become accepted among debaters at all levels. I am confident that I learned more in high school from the time I spent preparing for debate rounds than I did from the actual debate rounds themselves. Navigating a library, unpacking dense academic prose, writing clear arguments, and anticipating the dialectic of objections and replies are among the important skills LD students can acquire through their tournament preparation. But these skills come only at a high cost of time and effort. Debate businesses offer evidence, cases (or case outlines), and argument briefs at a much lower cost. And the successful names attached to these products lead-l would say mislead-many students to think the products are better than what the students could produce for themselves. Businesses thrive on substituting ease for effort. In some instances, this is all (or nearly all) to the good. But in an educational context where effort is the only means to learning, this economic division of labor is another way the profit motive threatens the purposes of the activity.

My third concern about the commercialization of LD is its promotion of an unhealthy celebrity culture. This occurs for at least two reasons. First, debate products and services will sell more if the people who sell them and the people who use them are viewed as debate stars. Second, debate students (like many people) are highly susceptible to the flattery of being treated like stars themselves, even if they are not highly accomplished. So debate businesses aggressively promote their staffs, their success stories, and even (to some extent) their ordinary customers. Their websites may circulate campy gossip and "insider only" jokes about staff and favored students. "Exclusive interviews" with popular students appear as celebrity infotainment. Pictures of regionally successful debaters with "live reports" on their performances popup on tournament weekends. One recent web banner ad for a for-profit workshop played overtly to celebrity appeal by showing a hand reaching out as if to cover an intrusive camera with a headline reading, "Fight the paparazzi."

I don't mean to suggest that these kinds of tactics are unusual in our culture or especially sinister when practiced by debate businesses. But I do believe it's unhealthy for everyone involved to elevate high school debaters to celebrity status. Most students I've taught have been too fixated on tournament success even without the prospect of debate stardom. The celebrity system encourages all students to focus on the wrong values, holding out trophies and reputation as the highest goods debate can offer. Moreover, many successful debaters already have bloated egos that can only be aggravated by fawning publicity from company websites. Likewise, promoting undergraduate judges and assistants as trend-setting heroes attracts the wrong sort of alumni back to debate.

The fourth problem I see with LD businesses is that they create conflicts of interest. The same ex-debaters who do most of the grunt work at these outfits also judge frequently at tournaments. They end up judging students they have been paid to teach in the summer and students using arguments and evidence they (the judges) were paid to produce. And because forprofit workshops tend to hire armies of high school seniors early in the debate season for the next summer, these future employees are now routinely being judged by their future employers and colleagues. In any other domain, these financial ties would be recognized as obvious conflicts of inter-

On the one hand, some of these conflicts are not unique to employees of forprofit businesses. Staff members of established non-profit institutes also often judge students who have attended their workshops, and that, too, is a conflict of interest that should end. On the other hand, I believe that these conflicts have sometimes been exploited by debate businesses. There has, for example, been a subtext in some advertising to the effect that "Our staff does a lot of judging at important tournaments, so if you want to know what wins, it would be a good idea to attend this workshop." I have talked to more than one student who felt unfairly targeted (or ignored) due to such connections between her judge and her opponent. I am sure some such reports are the result of exaggeration and inisperception. But having known some of the judges in question, I doubt that all are.

When assessing conflicts of interest, it is important to understand that a relationship need not actually produce unethical conduct in order to constitute an inappropriate conflict. The conflict is created by the circumstances, not by the immediate actions of the parties involved. So even if no debate business employee has ever judged unfairly due to his business affiliation, that affiliation still creates a conflict that should be recognized and remedied. For the same reason, not even ideally fairminded coaches are permitted to judge their own students against the students of other coaches.

In fairness to the businesses I am criticizing, I must note that this last concern about conflicts of interest is as much a problem with tournament administration as it is with money in LD. There are many potential conflicts of interest in debate judging situations, many of them unrelated to business ties. It is tournament directors who need to be more vigilant in monitoring and blocking potential conflicts of interest. The growth of debate businesses is simply the occasion for serious and widespread conflicts of interest that must be acknowledged.

III. Remedies

Supposing that you share my concerns about the effects of the profit motive on high school debate, what can you do? The obvious remedy is, don't feed the beast. One of the glories of a market economy is the freedom not to buy. If you do not like the influence of mail-order evidence, "demonstration" DVD's, or for-profit workshops, do not patronize them.

If you are a student accustomed to buying your ideas from other people, you can substitute your own work for the products sold to you by college students. You will learn more, not just about the current debate topic, but also about how to research and write. In addition to your local libraries, there are probably many people in your community, perhaps even in your circle of acquaintances, who would freely provide insights on debate topics as or more valuable than those you can purchase from a brief company.

Doing your own work is not only

more educationally profitable, it is also massively more satisfying. If you have ever grown a tomato or built a bookcase or baked a cake or changed a tire, you know how empowering it feels to be able to do for yourself what other people must pay to have done. Similarly, you will enter debate rounds with a sense of confidence when you have mastered the topic literature and written cases for yourself. You will know your arguments inside and out because they are really yours. You will have a greater sense of responsibility for both your successes and your failures because you will know that they are rooted in work you have done rather than paid someone else to do for you. Like an athlete, you will know that whether you win or lose, you are getting stronger and sharper because you are exercising. If you are fortunate enough to have a coach and teammates who work with you on LD, you will also experience the satisfaction of working with people you like and respect to produce something greater than any one of you could have produced alone.

If you are a coach, do not purchase topic-specific debate products for your students, and discourage them from purchasing them privately. Create research and casing assignments that will force students to do their own work. They may grumble now, but they will thank you later for what they learned from actively doing instead of passively consuming. Of course, hands-on debate preparation makes more work for coaches, too: You will have to teach your students the skills they need in order to do what LD businesses would otherwise do for them. The NFL has a number of free resources for coaches, including a growing internet archive of Rostrum articles on various events. Money that would have gone for topic-specific briefs can instead be spent on building a team library of classic and contemporary books that will allow students to research topics for themselves (more on this in a future article).

If your students attend summer workshops, make informed recommendations to their parents. You will, after all, have to live during the school year with whatever beliefs and attitudes those workshops instill. Find workshops with staff members you trust to serve as academic and personal role models. Compare costs and ask what motives drive various institutes. profit workshops are often official programs of universities; for-profit workshops often just rent space from universities. Coaches opposed to the expensive residential workshop system might collaborate with local colleagues to produce low- or no-cost commuter workshops for their students.

Finally, anyone who hosts an LD tournament should adopt stringent disclosure policies to block conflicts of interest. People who produce or sell topic-specific LD products should not judge LD rounds at all. People who have taught (or will teach) at a given summer workshop should not judge students who have attended (or who have been hired to teach at) that workshop. Rich Edwards, creator of the popular "Tabroom on the PC" tabluation software, has told me that it would be easy to revise his program to block such conflicts if tournaments requested such a revision. Coaches should firmly request that tournament directors implement these or similar policies to ensure fair and impartial judges for their students. That these changes might appear daunting for some tournaments shows just how rampant conflicts of interest are in debate judging today.

I recognize that students and coaches may have a variety of reasons for purchasing debate products, some of them legitimate. I also recognize that some of the people employed by debate companies are honorable and constructive educators. But the growing influence of money in LD and the shift away from skillful self-reliance toward passive consumption and entertainment are causes for concern.

Coach Profile

Meet William S. Hicks

William S. Hicks coaches at Brebeuf Jesuit Preparatory School in Indianapolis, IN. Bill is a sixth diamond coach and a member of the NFL Hall of Fame.

What was your first NFL experience?

When I was a senior in high school, the high school speech coach, who happened to be Hall of Fame Coach Jim Hawker, talked me into getting my NFL membership to be in the yearbook with the other speech team members. Then I asked him how I could get the most points possible and I went to my next tournament in Boys Extemp and earned enough points to get my NFL membership. That was also the end of my high school speech career.

When did you decide to be a teacher and/or coach?

Probably my sophomore year in college, after I realized I was not going to be a math teacher after taking my first 7:30 a.m. calculus class. At the time I was assisting Mr. Hawker's team and judging.

What is your team philosophy?

Basically to encourage participation and let as many students as possible participate. Also, to see my students continually improve.

How many hours do you spend with this activity a week?

I used to spend about twenty, including the Saturday trip. I normally stay about 2 hours after school every day. As of last year, I'm slowing down and spending less time on weekends at meets. I have excellent speech and debate coaches taking over most of the coaching duties.

What is your vision for the future of the NFL?

I'm very happy with all of the changes. Mr. Wunn's leadership has been outstanding. My vision is that the NFL will continue to grow and reach more people. It goes back to my team philosophy which is to get as many people as possible involved.

What is exciting about being an NFL coach in the state of Indiana?

Just the camaraderie with the other coaches out on the circuit and friendships that will last a lifetime.

What's unique about Brebeuf Jesuit Preparatory as an NFL chapter?

We've had lots of outstanding students and have been incredibly successful. (if that is unique.)

What qualities do you look for when recruiting students for your program?

Breathing. (laughs) Basically, I try to learn from them what their strengths are to know what events they would be most successful in.

How has the NFL changed since your days as a competitor?

Its grown and there's probably 2 or 4 times as many events. The points available to students have increased. Back in my day you could only get about 150 points maximum. Even the size of the national tournament is huge now.

What is your favorite memory from a National Tournament?

Probably when my student won 1st place in the Senate in Fargo, North Dakota. I was up in the balcony because I didn't expect him to win and I ran all the way down to the stage. Other highlights would include co-hosting two nationals in Indianapolis.

What is the greatest challenge as a coach today?

Competing with all of the other academic and athletic events. Really, just students' time.

Are there any rituals/lucky traditions that you employ as a coach?

I'm sure we've got some but they just happen. One year the kids had a car that they carried around to tournaments.

What's your favorite weekend tournament food item?

Hot dogs. It's not my favorite but it's the best of what is available. Coffee is also mandatory.

Spinning the District Website

A Philosophy of eCommunication

By Rev. B. A. Gregg

To quote Major General Henry M. Hobgood (USAF Ret.), "Communication is one of the hardest things to do." Though one would expect a two-star general to have no difficulty in getting his point across, the reality that communication – the joint-effort of informing and persuading – is much like milking a cow: difficult to describe, but once you get a good grip, easy to do.

Before we begin, we must applaud the internet innovations begun under James Copeland, NFL Executive Secretary Emeritus, and continued under the current Executive Secretary, J. Scott Wunn. The ability to enter student points online, to print out any form or report necessary, and the central clearinghouse of information is unparalleled in any high school organization on the national or state level. More, we must also realize that the Mid-Atlantic District has neither pioneered nor perfected the District website. There are a plethora of dynamic and replete District websites in the NFL -so many that to name one or two would do the rest injustice. Suffice it to say that we at the Mid-Atlantic are fairly late-comers to the game and have learned a great deal from those who have come before.

Certainly, as District Chairs, we each have the monumental task of coordinating and communicating to disparate district members — new coaches and novice coaches — the new and vibrant steps NFL is taking on the national level and the procedural changes cascading to the local level. The most useful tool for doing this, as we have discovered in the Mid-Atlantic District, has been the use of a District website. This article will develop the philosophy, the parameters, and the proven potential of a District website.

With the recent innovations on the NFL Online website, each District has a page to communicate essential information. This article, however, will deal with the proprietary District website, created by a website development program (e.g. Front Page, Publisher, Netscape, et al.) and a contracted domain through a web hosting company. The proprietary website, as opposed to the Nationally sponsored webpage, offers more pages for information, download options, and an easy to find domain name, such as www.nflva.org for the Mid-Atlantic site.

Part I. Website Philosophy

Simply put, the purpose of the District website is to communicate those essential issues necessary for forensics on the district-level. However, as the communication cycle dictates, we must establish a clear picture of target-audience.

"Coaches" does not even come close in identifying our target audience. Each district has experienced NFL warriorcoaches – the ones who keep their own Smith-Corona typewriter in the closet for the two-week cycle before each District tournament and who remember the 7thranked student in HI semifinals from seventeen years ago. These veteran coaches, on balance, tend to be somewhat reluctant to access information via the internet. In 2004 in the Mid-Atlantic, we pioneered the use of the type-in Adobe Acrobat forms now found on the NFL National website. Yet, even after instruction, many coaches were still breaking out the correction fluid and the old Royal manuals. The district website must, for this audience, take the place of the printed newsletter. In comparing the hosting costs of a website with the copying and mailing costs of a hard copy newsletter, this argument is an easy one to make. In addition to the NFL warriorcoaches, each district also has within its boundaries experienced non-NFL coaches, the Regional Powers, those who have tremendous state and regional programs, but who find NFL rules Byzantine in their complexity. The district website must outline the merits and tangible benefits of NFL competition to these coaches, playing upon their sense of competition in highlighting the standings of other programs in the states. And, finally, each district has a growing number of novice coaches who are both fresh to forensics and innocent to the benefits and burdens of the NFL. As more and more coaches are reaching the retirement-spike, Districts must take the forefront in encouraging and recruiting new coaches to our ranks. For this audience, contact information for, and geography of, each District Committee member should be available. I have pleasantly noted that South Carolina's website has a link for mentoring novice coaches. Clearly, a structured mentoring program, accessible through the website, for novice coaches at the district level would help our districts and the NFL as a whole to make the transition from оле generation of coaches to the next. A carefully planned District website can communicate to all these disparate coaching groups, giving them everything from overview to step-by-step procedures for registration of chapters, new members, as well as District- and National tournaments.

"Administrators" must be viewed as a vital audience for a district website. Certainly, for current NFL member-schools, administrators trust the work of the NFL sponsor and take little interest in the league affairs of a speech and debate team. However, that said, when school budgets are tight and administrators are under scrutiny and scrutinizing every budget line, the district website must be able to communicate the benefits to administrators in the glowing Administralian-terms they need: college acceptances, approval of the national and state activities associations, and corporate sponsorship. More, when a new coach is attempting to start an NFL chapter in a school, a district website that contains pertinent information needed for the decisionmaking process must be on-hand and readily available. Therefore, a list of Charter and Affiliate schools would be essential, a blurb regarding the benefits of the NFL should be right on the front page, and cogent news on schools and competitors should be readily apparent.

"Parents" must also be viewed as an important audience to the District website. Though most all parents will place their trust in a coach, most all parents will still want to know the particulars of where their children are and what they are doing during a two- or three-day District tournament ("You're going to be competing until When?!?"). Schedules, driving directions, and information regarding places to eat, meals served, and lodging should be ready for parents to access.

Finally, "Students" must be viewed as the spark that makes the district and District tournament snap. The information already outlined above is vitally important to each student in order to give meaning, supply competition, and offer direction for the event. But students need another tool - interconnectivity. For this reason, nflonline sponsors a student bulletin board, or forum, online. At the Mid-Atlantic, we also sponsor a student forum. I believe that two fora (one at the national- and the other at the district-level) may be at crosspurposes and that NFL would be betterserved by dividing-up the student for a into Districts, moderated by District committees. This would centralize information and communication and would better lead to understandable and accessible traffic to the NFL fora. Districts could easily put a link on their District webpage to the District forum on the NFL national site.

Part II. Parameters

With these four target-audiences in mind, we can formulate a District website philosophy that allows us to know exactly what should be in the website. In order to develop and maintain a successful District website, we must measure our efforts along two axes: Clear Communication of Message and Correct Communication of Message.

Clear Communication of Message takes into account essentials of layout and design. First, realize that white-space is your friend. The less smashed-together text is on a page, the easier it is for readers (or, in this case, surfers) to read the information and process it correctly. Photographs of students, coaches, or places around the District help break up the information and make the site more pleasing to the eye. Make sure to keep gutters, or the white space around each picture, consistent. Take a look at a newspaper and you will notice that all pictures have a uniformity of size and guttering; work to replicate that in your website. I have used the phrase "white space" with a purpose in mind. Namely, the current trend in many commercial websites is to replicate the printed page. Brown backgrounds with burgundy letters may look cool, but the result becomes lessthan-professional when viewed by a thirdparty and utterly horrid when a hardcopy on a black-and-white laser printer is generated. Finally, in discussing the typesetting of a website, the font that is used must be uniform throughout. Browsers support only a few fonts. Old Boudleiere Cheese Font 1902 may really complement your message and mood, but most web browsers will either convert this font to another commonly used one (e.g. Times New Roman, Arial) or will used boxes in lieu of your wonderfully thought-out words. One last word on fonts: maintain the same font or a similar one throughout the document. Never mix serif (footy fonts, such as Times New Roman) with sans-serif (non-footy fonts, such as Arial). When you mix fonts, your website looks more like a ransom-note than a central clearinghouse of information.

Not only does design matter in Clear Communication of Message, but so does ease in navigation. Though information usually goes beyond one page, attempt to break up the blocks of information as much as possible into subpages. The Navigation Bar for each webpage is essential for this uniformity and dispersal of information. Each page should have a repeating Navigation Bar, either horizontal across the screen, or Vertical, down the screen.

Finally, in addressing Clear Communication, realize that everything we write makes perfect sense to us as we are writing it (usually at 2 a.m., watching some infomercial on the newest kitchen wonder that will save us hours of clean-up time), but can have incredible gaps of reasoning and abysses of ambiguity to anyone else. This is where getting the to-be-posted information to the other District committee members for review and comment comes in hand. When Bruno E. Jacob conceived of the idea of District Committee, he did it realizing that one person can't do it all. Therefore, as time is a scarce commodity during the school year, we should plan out just what will appear in the District website during the summer with the District Committee. If we have everything in place, as much as we can, the amount of corrections will be limited and the time with our own teams and not dealing with District Drugery (eDrugery ranks right up there with sorting a really, really large sock drawer) will be maximized.

In turning to Correct Communication of Message, know that the more we replicate the same information in a website on different page, the more likely that information will be wrong at least half the times the information is given. Schedules and locations and procedures change throughout the year, no matter how carefully planned-out beforehand. But when we change information in one place in the website, we have to go through the entire website and change that information throughout on each page. This task moves from painful to chaotic around a month before the District tournament. Speaking from experience, the information on the site should be carefully planned-out so that, when changes do occur, information needs to only be corrected in one place in the site. As a shortcut for this change, a central .pdf document, a District Bible, linked to by the webpage, might be more useful than having information on the tournament logistics (most susceptible to change) scattered throughout the website.

Whoever is in charge of the District website, whether it be District Chair, Committee member, or someone brought in for the task, needs to be an active part of the decision-making loop. If this means creating an ad hoc committee member in charge of communication, do so. The farther the webmaster is from the decision-making process, the less clear the communication is for the decisions that are made and the philosophy hehind them. More, the farther the webmaster is from the decision-making process, the greater the time-lag in getting the information updated to the website.

Finally, as the last essential step of correct communication, a District email list must be created to communicate changes and updates on the website. District email lists are not, generally, good for afor communication of District issues, as positions and concerns brought before a large group - especially in print - are that much more likely to be intractable than when hrought in private to committee members. Remember, speech and debate coaches are a very small, very specialized group, of talented and intelligent people locked in the mortal combat that is competitive forensics... the hardest group in the world in which to develop an idea of cooperative community. Here is where the human touch takes up where technology leaves off.

Part III. Proven Potential

An effective District Website should create numbers for the District tournament. We have found, in the Mid-Atlantic, a corresponding correlation between website development and promotion and District attendance. We have seen a 100% increase in Congress and Speech entries and a 50% increase in debate entries, over the last three years. This has translated into a commensurate increase in tournament fees, allowing for more and better awards, a more nutritious and even tasty menu for the judges' lounge, and more hired judges brought in to alleviate sectioning nightmares in the eighth round of the District tournament.

Realize that the District website must address the needs of the District - from coaching mentors, to local tournament calendars, to Chair newsletters, to information of affiliation and charter membership, to student feedback and fora - we must not lose sight that the essential information required on each District website is the information regarding the District tournament. At the Mid-Atlantic, we have found that having a separate page, entitled "National Qualifying Tournaments," linking to subsites for each District tournament (Congress, Speech, and Debate), has proven incredibly useful for breaking down the information of each District tournament. With a replicated format of Welcome Page, Logistics page, Registration Page, and Event Rules Page, we have been able to properly divide the information required.

The Welcome Page, dates and times, as well as the NFL apportionment chart, unique fees, and judging burdens, allows coaches a simple thumbnail of the tournament. Keep the Welcome Page short.

The Logistics Page deals with the those issues of schedule, directions, lodging, and meals that are essential to the running of the tournament. By using tools, such as Maquest (trn), to link driving directions to a tournament site, to determine all the restaurants and hotels (complete with phone numbers) in a 15-mile radius around the tournament site), the Logistics page becomes quite easy to develop. Through keeping the schedule as a downloadable Adobe Acrobat .pdf file (many word processing programs, such as WordPerfect, can directly create .pdf files).

The Registration Page encompasses the preRegistration estimate, a simple eForm that will send an email of each school's preRegistration estimate to the tournament registrar, to the step-by-step process for registration and downloading the Registration Packet. We have successfully experimented with an eForm to electronically submit Congress legislation one month before the tournament. The legislation for each school arrives in an email to the Clerk of Congress to compile into a single legislation document for eventual download by each congressor. We have also developed an eSubmission and ePublishing of debate judging paradigms to be very useful and popular. Some districts have successfully developed eRegistration for the District tournament, itself. Though a proponent of eSubmission (or putting "e-" in front of any word possible), I have some reservations regarding the full benefit of such eSubmission, as we still need hard-copy of signature, singleintent letters, and full copies of original orations. Yet, certainly, this eSubmission is a necessary step in the right direction.

Finally, the District tournament site should have a page devoted to Event Descriptions for students, coaches, and judges. As NFL varies from local leagues in its event rules, this page of event rules is essential for all to read and heed and should be taken directly from the NFL webpage each year. If this page can be duplicated as a downloadable and printable Adobe .pdf document, coaches should be encouraged to run off multiple copies for each judge. We don't want a student penalized unfairly for running a multiple-character Duo by a judge who, in ignorance, mistook the "N" for a "C" before the "-FL."

In closing, we must continue to look toward the future as a discipline and as districts. The NFL is coming upon an important generation-shift as teachers begin to retire. Through communication, inclusion, and connectivity – with a website only being one tool toward this goal – we can move forward toward seeing NFL as vibrant, as strong, and as rewarding at its 100th anniversary as it is at its 80th.

What Can We Do For A Fundraiser?

Ideas With a New Approach

By Toby Pickens

Fundraising is an idea that is often met with many heavy sighs and moans of frustration. No one likes to sell door to door, and many schools have even eliminated door to door sales as a fundraising option. So what's an organization to do? Many stick to the usual candy, food, or sports item sales. After that, we run out of ideas. However, the trick to fundraising is finding out what is unique to your school and community.

These ideas don't have to be bold and earth shattering - just find something that will appeal to a wide range of people. For example, most teachers at my school love having "casual Friday" when they are allowed to wear blue jeans. Knowing how strongly the teachers looked forward to this day, our principal allowed teachers to add an extra casual day to the week, on Mondays, at a cost of $5.00 per week for 10 weeks. The "Casual Mondays" fundraiser added several hundred dollars to our NFL fund, and this project didn't cost our NFL members time or effort.

Another organization in our high school took advantage of our school's annual basketball tournament. The tournament is held all throughout the day on a Thursday and Friday. This year, teachers were allowed to take their students to see the games at a cost of .50 cents per student per period. It was an all or nothing system in which every student had to go or no one was allowed to go. Students who didn't have money were always taken care of by other students who wanted to donate money for the common cause. In this two-day period, $2500.00 was raised.

Other organizations have capitalized on the dreaded activity of wrapping Christmas gifts by hosting a Wrapping Day for our community. People in the community bring as many Christmas items and packages as they want and are eager to pay $1.00 per item to be wrapped. Community members comment that this service relieves stress around this often hectic time of year.

Hosting a tournament is another idea. I'm not talking about hosting the usual speech and debate tournament. Instead, schools can host golf, fishing, and even domino tournaments where contestants put up an entry fee and then hope to win a trophy by the end of the day or a cheap prize like a $50.00 gift card. These tournaments allow for a broader group of people to participate and have fun.

The key to fundraising is finding out what appeals specifically to your particular school and community. Ask yourself what types of activities do students and community members take part in? Do people like to bicycle, walk, or ski? If so, then host a bikea-thon or a walk-a-thon, etc. You'd be amazed how many people jump at the opportunity to pay a fee in order to compete just for the sheer joy of competition.

In addition, look for activities that involve all age groups. For example, organizations can offer some type of mini-camp during the summer that allows small children to learn and discover their surroundings. Anita Lee, our school's science department chair, hosts a science Geek Week every summer where students participate in fun, hands-on science activities, and then at the end of the week, they take a field trip. The students enjoy themselves without realizing that they are actually learning. Another interesting observation of Mrs. Lee's is that, more often than not, parents are willing to pay whatever fee necessary to keep their children busy during the summer as opposed to sitting in front of the TV.

Next year, before ordering those boxes of chocolate candy to sell, think of new and innovative fundraisers that your students and community members will actually enjoy. You'll be pleasantly surprised at the results.

Raising Money, A Necessary Evil

Welcomed Ideas

By Anson Shuman

Some programs are very blessed with money. However, we, as a speech team, must acquire funding each year on our own. We are not in a situation where admission is charged to generate funds for speech, debate, acting, or drama. This fact is not new and we are not alone. Many of the programs across the United States must raise their own money. It is no different than band, cheerleading, drill team, music, and other programs. Car washes, bake sales, candy sales, candle sales, Christmas paper sales and the list goes on with ways that have been tried to raise money. Until we began attending national competition in the summer months, these types of fund-raisers were fine and produced the funds necessary to pay our fees and transportation to travel in the state of Oklahoma. Our district is a district not unlike many others with very limited funds. While the school system would like to give us funds, they are not available.

The first national trip we took was to the second middle school national tournament which was held at Atwood Lake Resort in Ohio. We needed to raise $12,000. This was an amount we had never attempted before. How were we going to be able to do it? Car washes were not going to be adequate.

A parent volunteer, experienced in fundraising, became my drive chairman. She suggested two activities to raise the money. The first was to visit the Chamber of Commerce in Ardmore and obtain their help. They gave us a list of chamber members, as well as, the use of their fax machine to copy a letter to be mailed to some 400 members. A letter was drafted for this purpose which received the approval of the principal and was signed by the principal, the drive chairman, and myself. We, also, printed enough copies of the letter for students attending the trip to personally hand their prospects when they made contact with a business. An article explaining what we were doing was placed in the local newspaper, along with public service announcements on the local television and radio stations. Our students worked in groups of two or more, always with an adults. Each student group had a different list of businesses to visit. Students asked to speak to the manager or owner and simply gave them the letter, voiced a quick script of the purpose, and answered any questions they might have. The team also provided a receipt for tax purposes. We selected half of the businesses to visit in person and half to speak with on the phone. From 9 am until noon, we contacted businesses on the phone, as well as, visited the ones we had identified for personal contact. This project raised $9,500 in ten days.

Our last activity was "A Night of Elegance". This event, which included a silent auction, was held in a new private school facility in Ardmore. Items were donated by community businesses, as well as, colleges (signed footballs, baseballs, and basketballs). Donations ranged from a set of tires given by Uniroyal plant to an autographed football by a popular professional player. The event was advertised on radio, television, and newspaper. Students, also, placed flyers in businesses that gave us permission to do so and in surrounding towns. Admission fee for "A Night of Elegance" was $5 which included unlimited dessert, coffee or soft drinks. The team entertained our guests with a performance of the pieces they would be taking to contest. This event raised an additional $4,000.

Since that time, we organized and participated in the following events to raise funds for our AMS Speech and Debate program. We have one car wash where tickets are sold ahead of time, as well as, at the car wash. We advertise this event well in advance. We also, participate in a fund-raiser called the Lemonade Stand, which is easy and profitable. In addition, we present a play production each year with five performances. Of course, we visit the Chamber of Commerce to pick up their list of members. After five years, we still raise over $7,000 a year by contacting the Ardmore businesses. We are grateful to those who give their support to the Ardmore Middle School speech team. We try to give back to our community by participating in community service. This is a win-win situation for our students and adult sponsors, as well as good for our community. The process of raising money is fun for the students on the team, it gives them a sense of pride, and is a great learning experience.

If you would like more information, please email me at pinknie63@hotmail.com. I will help you all that I can.

What Did You Miss About Your Speech and Debate Teammates or Coach Over the Summer?

Visit the 'Student Resources' section of the NFL website for future question(s) posed.

Austin from Arizona

His humor. He is always joking. Always putting a smile on your face. No matter what mood you are in.

Ashlee from Arizona

I missed my coach, because she's always there for me to listen and help with pieces and she's always helping me cut.

Seth from Kansas

The friendly competition and stories.

Alyssa from New Mexico

I missed all of the fun things we do spontaneously. Like after class, we go outside and hang out, and end up having our own random Improv's and debates, and then we start talking in Congress jargon.

Sara from Minnesota

This summer, I missed being surrounded by my zany speech teammates because I didn't have all of their different perspectives, solid intellect, and goofy ideas to help me keep seeing the world the way it ought to be seen.

Virginia from Oregon

I miss competition with my friends the most. This was the first year for our schools debate team and we started the tradition off well sending three students to state. The opportunities we had and will continue to have to support each other mean the most to me. The fact that I know almost every member's speech on my team says to me that our team is meant for the best. We have fun while researching for the latest topics and practicing late into the night the day before the tournament. Our coach is with us 100% of the way and I know that after I graduate, she will be someone that has influenced the person I am. Without my speech and debate team, I would be bored over the summer. At least now, I can look forward to that first tournament of the year, that first opportunity to show what my team can do!

Jeffrey from Texas

I missed the constant drama that my team has, and how we are always able to figure things out and be friends by the end of the day. That's what makes us a team: our camaraderic through thick and thin.

Victor from Texas

I missed the people themselves. Once you are a team you get so close that it almost feels like a second family of sorts. Everyone has a role and everyone is important. I can't wait to see them again and get this year (my Senior year) started!

Sam from Utah

Bincoln Douglas Debate

Building a LD Team Library

By Jason Baldwin

New Monthly Column

Note: Below is the first installment of a new column devoted exclusively to LD debate. Each month a different Lincoln-Douglas Perspectives contributor will reflect on some issue of interest to the LD community. Although authors speak for themselves and not for the NFL, articles will present an educational outlook that is broadly consistent with the NFL's motto: "Training youth for leadership." LD Perspectives editor Jason Baldwin (jbaldwin@nd.edu) welcomes suggestions for subjects readers would like to see discussed in future columns.

Every LD team should have a small collection of books to serve as references for frequently-checked facts, starting points for new topic research, and cures for bored, idle or empty minds. Constructing such a library should be of special interest to teams that do not have ready access to good research libraries and teams that purchase LD evidence through the mail. For the price of a year's subscription to Acme Briefs, churned out hurriedly by college underclassmen and obsolete after two months, a team could have the start of a library of books by great philosophers and scholars that will never expire-and a team library gives the team members the chance to read and think for themselves, rather than passively consuming the work of another. Gathering LD-useful books is obviously not an original or subtle idea, but the resulting collections can be better or worse. Below, I consider, in turn, types of books to collect, inexpensive sources of books, and the organization and use of a team's books.

There are four broad categories of books to acquire for an LD team library. The first type is classics of moral and political philosophy. These are works such as Locke's Second Treatise and Mill's On Liberty. They are themselves directly applicable to many LD resolutions, and they are required background reading to understand much of the contemporary literature on other resolutions. Aside from their competitive utility, a first acquaintance with these books is one of the best possible outcomes of doing LD, and they should be within arm's reach anytime a team is hashing out arguments.

A second type of books to add to a team library is secondary sources in moral and political philosophy. For students approaching philosophy for the first time, a guided overview of the terrain can be very helpful. Many textbooks are written to fill just this need. Examples are the once-ubiquitous Individual and the Political Order (Norman E. Bowie and Robert L. Simon; now out of print) and The Elements of Moral Philosophy (James Rachels). Like most textbooks, secondary overviews can be purchased inexpensively online.

A third type of book important for team libraries is the anthology. Anthologies are textbooks that bring together extracts from many primary sources. Some anthologies (such as Louis Pojman's Moral Philosophy: A Reader) focus on classic works, and these are a good way for younger debaters to encounter the great authors in a helpfully abridged form. Other anthologies (such as Hugh LaFollette's Ethics in Practice) focus on contemporary controversies and may contain one or more readings on the subjects of particular LD resolutions (e.g., welfare redistribution, censorship, or affirmative action). Still other anthologies combine classic theories and contemporary applications (Joel Feinberg and Hyman Gross's Philosophy of Law is a good example). Anthologies generally cost more than a book by a single author, but they offer more in return-access to many sources expertly edited into a single volume. And like secondary-source textbooks, they can be purchased used for much less than their new prices.

Reference works are a fourth type of book valuable for an LD team library. At a minimum, every LD team needs a couple of good dictionaries. For general-purpose collegiate dictionaries, Webster's and American Heritage are reliable. Black's Law Dictionary and the Cambridge Dictionary of Philosophy are more specialized but useful sources. Several one-volume references contain essay-length introductions with good bibliographies on many contemporary moral and political issues. Examples are the Oxford Handbook of Practical Ethics and the Blackwell Companion to Applied Ethics (an especially good LD team investment). Finally, two multi-volume reference works merit special mention: the Encyclopedia of Ethics and the Encyclopedia of Applied Ethics. These are both quite expensive but helpful on many LD topics.

Building a team library can be expensive, but it does not have to be. There are at least three inexpensive sources for used academic hooks. The first is a library used bookstore or sale. Libraries frequently receive donations of books they cannot use in their collections, and public libraries also discard many of their own books every year. Libraries normally sell these books for $2 or less, and I have picked up many LD-relevant titles this way over the years.

College professors are a second source of cheap philosophy books, especially anthologies. Anyone who teaches courses in moral or political philosophy has probably been flooded with free book samples from publishers hoping he will require their textbooks for courses. Many of the professors I know would gladly donate some of these unwanted textbooks to a high school debate team. If you have a college or university in your area, you have nothing to lose by calling its philosophy department to ask for spare books.

Of course, the internet is a third source for used books. Amazon.com lists used copies from private vendors alongside the new versions of books it stocks. For used textbooks, half.com is probably the best alternative to Amazon. And www.bookfinder.com allows you to compare a variety of used (and new) book prices with a single search. When buying used textbooks online, pay special attention to the condition, since student-owned copies often have battered covers and sloppy highlighting.

Buying books new should be a last resort for budget-conscious teams. If you must buy new, Hackett Publishing (www.hackettpublishing.com) is a reputable publisher of paperback philosophy classics. Liberty Fund (www.libertyfund.org) is a non-profit publisher of many inexpensive libertarian-leaning books, especially in economics and American government. And Labyrinth Books (www.labyrinthbooks.com) has a large selection of remaindered philosopby at deep discounts. Otherwise, your best bet is to compare prices at www.bestbookbuys.com.

Debate team libraries tend to be small enough that no elaborate organization is required. But they must be organized enough to keep them intact. The simplest way to keep a library intact is to prohibit students from taking books out of the debate room. This may be the best policy for some teams, especially large ones, but it will limit the library's utility. Few students, for example, are likely to be able to study Kant's Groundwork in the chaos of the typical high school classroom.

Here is a simple borrowing system for a small library: Label each book inside the front cover with the team's name and its own number, beginning with 1 for the first book (the order of books does not matter). Keep a library notebook with two sections. In the first section, list the team's books by number. In the second section, keep a record of books checked out by students. Each line should have four columns. The first lists the book's number, the second lists the student's name, the third lists the date checked out, and fourth lists the date returned. Such a notebook allows a teacher to tell at a glance who has what book(s) checked out.

Team libraries have several obvious uses. They are a ready reference when questions about a philosopher's view or the meaning of a philosophical term arise during team discussions. They are a launching point for new topic research, providing definitions, preliminary readings, and bibliographies for further library research. They are a source for enrichment reading projects during the summer and off-season. There is also, I believe, a more abstract value in students seeing serious books used frequently with affection and respect.

The National Symposium for Debate finished its first rewarding session. The staff and administration are excited about the experience that the students received. If you were not at NSD you missed out on an amazing institute dedicated to the individual growth of each student.

Highlights of the NSD experience include:

- 4:1 student to teacher ratio
- 1:1 student to computer ratio (no rotation of labs through computer labs)
- 4/5 of the auto-qualified students to the TOC next year attended NSD; no other camp had this many
- 14 fully critiqued rounds by some of the finest judges in the nation
- One-on-one office hours with our prestigious debate faculty
- A curriculum catered to students' specific needs

National Symposium for Debate

If you did not have the opportunity to experience NSD this summer, consider attending next year! Visit our website for more pictures from NSD 2005.

Eric Perelman: NSD was the most amazing debate experience I've ever had. The staff was truly phenomenal and dedicated to the students. I feel extremely fortunate that I was able to attain so many skills for the future.

Michael O'Connell: I have never learned so much in such a short period of time. NSD will prepare any debater with the strategy, the work habits, and the knowledge to be successful in her debate career, whether local, regional, or national.

Claire Totten: This was the best, most educational and enjoyable camp I have attended.

Prashant Rai: I have attended three institutes and NSD blows all of them out of the water.

Mihii Gupta: There's no comparing to NSD!

Katie Crockett: NSD provided the most educational opportunity with lots of individual attention. The access and quality of the faculty is second to none. The small student-faculty ratio and individual attention provided a phenomenal learning experience. I learned so much in such a small amount of time.

Sophie Asher: I liked the people, staff, and individualized attention. NSD was better than all other institutes because it was small and focused on the students.

N S D

The National Symposium for Debate is dedicated exclusively to Lincoln-Douglas Debate and aims to enhance students' educational experiences. Our 2005 inaugural summer institute introduced 86 students to the NSD vision of educational debate. All-around superior student reviews and excellent coach feedback have incited us to expand our offerings to more effectively meet the varied needs of students and coaches.

NSD is pleased to announce a new institute experience available for students: a winter institute dedicated to preparation on the January/February LD topic. Distinct from summer institutes, our winter institute has the advantage of knowing the upcoming topic. NSD will guide you through topic analysis, case writing, and practice rounds on the topic many students will debate at state tournaments, district tournaments, TOC qualifiers, and the TOC itself.

NSD Briefs

Some of the finest debate minds in the country write topic analyses and cut evidence for each topic, available to you for $15. Moreover, NSD will include two unique features as part of NSDBriefs:

NSD Interactive Chat. Upon purchasing NSDBriefs, you will receive the necessary information to join Tim Case, coach of the 2005 NCFL and NFL National Champion, and other staff for an online topic discussion. The staff will answer any questions you have, while assisting you with brainstorming and case-writing.

NSD Essays. Each production of NSDBriefs will include an essay on a topic applicable to debate rounds in general, regardless of the resolution. These essays will range from skills and strategy (e.g. how to beat a spread, how to crystallize effectively) and debate theory (e.g. debating topicality, counterplan theory) to analyzing philosophical positions (e.g. understanding a specific philosophy, how to answer complex arguments).

Insightful analyses, well-cut evidence, and inclusion of unique services no other briefs provide make NSDBriefs your best option for debate briefs. We hope you take this chance to learn from the best — and become a champion!

ANNUAL REPORT 2004 - 2005

This report summarizes the number of new members and degrees added by each chapter during the school year 2004-2005. It does not reflect the current strength of each chapter. The "Total" column indicates accumulated members and degrees since the chapter founding or the Leading Chapter Award.

The column marked '05 designates the chapter rank as of August 31, 2005. The column '04 designates the chapter rank the previous year. Each year the top chapter in accumulated members and degrees, not more than one in a district, receives the Leading Chapter Award, then its accumulated total returns to zero and begins a new record. The symbol ('93) indicates the last time a chapter won the Leading Chapter Award. A school may not receive the Leading Chapter Award unless it has been a member for five years or five years has passed since last receiving the award. If it lost its Charter or has been suspended or expelled or failed to add new members and degrees during the school year it is also ineligible. A tie in the accumulated total for the Leading Chapter Award is broken in favor of the school which enrolled the greater number of new members and degrees during that school year. This report does not contain the records of affiliate schools.

Meet the Council

By Liz Leach

Each month the Rostrum will feature an Executive Council Board Member

Having coached all events in three different regions of the country, as well as having traveled his teams extensively, Ted Belch brings a unique perspective to the Executive Council. Ted became a coach as part of his first teaching assignment in North Carolina. He began coaching all events and qualified his first student to Nationals in Original Oratory his first year. After receiving his Masters degree in Rhetoric and Public Address, Ted accepted a teaching position at Panas High School in New York. There he coached a small all-events team until 1980 when he moved to Glenbrook South in Illinois and began focusing primarily on debate. In 1994, Ted moved to Glenbrook North where he coached debate until his retirement from teaching in 2004.

Ted twice ran unsuccessfully for the Council in the late 70s and early 80s before being elected in 1990. Ted was elected to the Executive Council by the District Chairs (according to the NFL Constitution at that time) to serve the remaining term left by the death of Phyllis Flory Barton. Since the first election to the Executive Council, Ted has served consecutively, never missing a meeting. He believes that one "must 'give back' to whatever community one belongs as well as serving on local, state, and national committees to help make things better". Increasing the number of participating schools, providing meaningful events and the most scholarship money possible, and serving the needs of the entire NFL community are just a few of Ted's primary goals for the Executive Council.

Ted has a number of responsibilities on the Executive Council. He is the chairperson of the Future Nationals committee and makes a number of site visits to possible locations. In the mid-90s Ted cochaired the Coach Education Committee with former NFL President Lanny Naegelin. During the National Tournament, Ted has done everything from running Lincoln-Douglas debate and Original Oratory to debate auditing in recent years.

Ted's vision for the future of the NFL focuses on coach education and retention, scholarship opportunities for students in addition to the National Tournament, financial security for the league, and speech education in every high school in America.

As a coach for 35 years, Ted's greatest memory is "the wonderful kids" whom he coached as well as the coaches of the NFL. He, of course, remembers hosting Nationals twice, in 1972 at Wake Forest and 1992 at the Glenbrooks. He is now looking forward to a third try as he will serve on the host committee in 2008 when the NFL heads to the desert of Nevada. Ted most certainly remembers the six National Champion Policy Debate teams and two National Top Policy Speakers he coached throughout his career. As for Ted's favorite tournament food, he names "the wonderful southern home cooking that Marilee Dukes at Vestavia Hills would provide every year at the Novice Round Robin."

Ted names the students and coaches he has worked with over the past 36 years as his family. In his spare time, Ted enjoys reading and going to plays. He also enjoys traveling and hopes to do more of it. Ted's students gave him a wine cellar as a retirement gift and now collecting wine is a favorite hobby.

With a career in the NFL that has spanned decades, four schools, more than 30 National Tournaments, and countless students, it is clear that Ted Belch is an integral member of not only the Executive Council, but the entire NFL.

Learn the art of leadership

Abraham Lincoln remains revered by scholars and laymen alike as one of America's greatest presidents. And one of his strongest qualities was the power to communicate. The National Forensic League helps high-school students develop this vital leadership skill. That's why Lincoln Financial Group is a proud sponsor of the NFL Call 920-748-6206 to ask about joining the National Forensic League.
